

NOTICE OF RESIGNATION

From time to time members seek to accept new job opportunities with other school boards. In the past, particularly during times of surplus and redundancy, changing one's employer in the education world was risky. In recent years, however, the shortage of teachers has significantly reduced this risk.

Timing of Opportunities

Difficulties can arise if the timing of this opportunity does not coincide with the language set out in their current collective agreement regarding providing notice. Most collective agreements will contain a timeline requirement for notice of retirement or resignation. An important caveat to these timelines is the addition of the words "or by mutual agreement." Some members have found themselves in a dilemma when an opportunity to move has arisen at a time that does not allow them to meet these notice provisions.

The Dilemma of "What to Do"

It should be emphasized that a member should follow the language set forth in their collective agreement. Sometimes, however, members find themselves in a situation where circumstances make it impossible to comply with existing notice provisions. An example of such a situation is where an individual is offered a position with a different school board in late summer when his/her current employer is expecting them to return in September. Educators should never simply walk away from their responsibilities to the current employer.

Resignation by Mutual Consent

It may be possible to obtain the "mutual agreement" referred to above. Educators should speak with their supervisory officer, explain the circumstances and request that they be granted a "resignation by mutual consent." It is important to understand that school boards are under no obligation to agree to such a request. The granting of this request is often dependent upon the ease with which a board can fill the resulting vacancy.

What if the Employer says No?

For both legal and professional reasons, members may need to decline or postpone an opportunity with a new employer. In these circumstances, it will be important to contact the potential employer to explain the situation. It is possible the employer may be willing to defer hiring to allow the individual to adhere to the notice provisions in resigning from their current position. The federation strongly advises members not to abandon their current employment contract. The risks are both legal and professional.

College of Teachers and College of Early Childhood Educators

School boards or other individuals are allowed to complain to the College of Teachers and College of Early Childhood Educators if they believe the member has shown "professional misconduct." While there is no specific provision making the termination of a contract without notice grounds for professional misconduct, there are certain general provisions contained in the professional misconduct regulation, which may be relied upon to allow for such complaints to be filed. These include "failing to maintain the standards of the profession" and "conduct unbecoming a member."

The following provides a checklist of actions to consider when looking to change your employer:

- Strive to have the timing of the change coincide with the provisions of your collective agreement so that adequate notice can be given.
- If this is not possible, consult with your local representative and work with your employer to obtain "mutual agreement" in the termination of your obligation to your current school board.
- Call the Professional Relations staff at ETFO for advice and assistance.
